Gregory Storer – Candidate Melbourne Ports

3 Aug 2010

Equal Rights for All

Australia has its first female Prime Minister. It's a great move forward for Australia.

So many women in our society are still treated as second-class citizens, whether it's Tony Abbott telling us that a woman's virginity is a gift, a church organisation discriminating against pregnant single women, or young girls being told they have to find a man within their faith. Discrimination abounds.

The Secular Party of Australia has a clear policy on personal freedoms. We recognise that faith-based morality frequently seeks to impose its religious views on the entire population, especially when it comes to women.

Faith-based philosophies are likely to try to restrict a woman's access to proper medical treatment for unwanted pregnancy, they are more likely to dictate the terms of marriage and some faiths have specific laws regarding what clothes are unacceptable to wear.

The Secular Party upholds that all men and women are equal and that equality is a fundamental human right. We will work toward a Secular Australia where all citizens are treated equally.

Gregory Storer calls on the current Melbourne Ports representative Michael Danby and Liberal Candidate Kevin Ekendahl to join him in giving unqualified support to equal rights for all women regardless of their religious affiliation or personal circumstances.

It's not too much to ask, is it?

A vote for Gregory Storer will send a clear message that you value equal rights in a fair and secular Australia.
